The STA Annual Meeting: More Bang for the Buck!

This year’s Annual Meeting, “Extending Our Reach: Renovating and Innovating,” is shaping up to be an outstanding opportunity for members to take advantage of educational opportunities, networking opportunities, and the opportunity to meet and hear from one of the country’s foremost archivists, Dr. Trudy Peterson. While the current cost of gas is a concern, don’t let it deter your from attending. The registration cost for members will be $35.00, and has been kept as low as possible so the everyone, regardless of travel budget, can attend. The intended workshop program will feature a pre-conference workshop on Oral History, along with workshops on preservation, fund-raising, managing photographs, and others.

And then there’s the for this year’s meeting: the DuBose Conference Center. Situated on the Cumberland Mountain Plateau, the conference center is away from it all, occupying sixty-five acres of woodlands and open fields, yet it has all the amenities necessary to guarantee a successful meeting. Accommodations include rustic cabins, dormitory rooms, and private guest rooms. For more on the DuBose Center see page 4.
COUNTY MUSIC FOUNDATION COMPLETES
ORAL HISTORY PROJECT

The Country Music Foundation, Inc. (CMF), has completed an oral history preservation and access project made possible by a substantial grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities (NEH).

To advance its mission of preserving and disseminating the history of country music, the non-profit Country Music Foundation, Inc. (CMF) began collecting interviews and other research materials soon after the 1967 opening of Country Music Hall of Fame® and Museum, which is owned and operated by CMF. Our ongoing Oral History Project was launched officially in 1974.

Now embracing 666 interviews, the Oral History Collection forms a key component of CMF’s Frist Library and Archive, housed in the newer Museum building opened in downtown Nashville in 2001. The collection contains interviews with performers, recording artists, songwriters, and a wide variety of business personnel involved in the country music industry since the 1920s.

In 2001, CMF received a generous NEH grant of $213,475, which CMF matched, making the total project budget $426,950. We used these funds to make new recordings of 610 interviews in our collection, and to transcribe them in searchable Microsoft Word files. These interviews add to twenty-eight interviews that exist only in transcript form. During the project, CMF also made new recordings for an additional twenty-eight interviews that have difficult sound problems, and we will attempt transcriptions after performing additional sound enhancements.

Thus, 638 transcripts are available at our library in Microsoft Word files. MARC-format catalogue records are available on OCLC, in addition to MARC-format, in-house catalogue records software and an in-house oral history project database.

A Collection Guide—Descriptive Inventory is now available on CMF’s Web site (www.countrymusichalloffame.com), either by following links to Exhibits and Collections under the heading Experience the Museum, or by using this link: http://www.countrymusichalloffame.com/site/exhibits-detail.aspx?cid=237. This finding aid provides contact information and use policies, as well as an interview list and interview descriptions. For further information contact reference@countrymusichalloffame.com.

CMF is indeed grateful to the National Endowment for the Humanities for its support. For their guidance and expertise, CMF is also grateful to project advisory panel members Jim Fogerty, Head of Documentary Programs at the Minnesota Historical Society; Professor Don Doyle, of the University of South Carolina Department of History; Harry Rice, Special Collections Librarian at Berea College; Professor Kris McCusker, of the Middle Tennessee State University Department of History; and media producer Robert K. Oermann, author and co-author of several books on country music history.

Tennessee Archivist, Summer-Fall 2008
President’s Message

Friends and Colleagues –

Greetings! It is hard to believe Fall has already arrived and annual meeting time is just around the corner. Steve Cox and the Arrangements Committee have developed a stellar program again this year. We are excited to welcome former Acting Archivist of the United States, Dr. Trudy Peterson, to Tennessee as this year’s keynote speaker, and pleased to continue the tradition of providing a pre-conference workshop prior to the meeting.

On a personal note, I am grateful for the work of our committees. The Nominating Committee has recommended Jim Havron of the Nashville Public Library to the post of Vice President/President-Elect for the 2008-2009 year. Jim has served for the past several years on the STA Executive Committee as the Society’s Southern Archivists Conference Representative and was instrumental in hosting the SAC meeting in Nashville earlier this year. The Education Committee is accepting applications for STA’s student scholarship, which provide a stipend and cover expenses for two Tennessee students interested in Archives to attend the meeting each year. Applications are also being accepted for the Thweatt Awards honoring outstanding achievement in archives in Tennessee. The Bylaws Review Committee appointed at STA’s annual meeting last year is also hard at work. Executive Committee members have met several times throughout the year and continually perform Society tasks too numerous to recount!

We are an organization of commitment and cooperation. It has been my sincere privilege and fortune to be part of this group of dedicated individuals for the past several years. Thank you for the opportunity to serve!

Warm regards,

* Taffey

New Archive at the Bellevue United Methodist Church

The “ribbon cutting” of its new archive was held in May, 2008, at Bellevue United Methodist Church. Blessed with a rich history, church members created the archive in anticipation of its bicentennial celebration in 2009. Even though many early paper records and photographs were lost, numerous documents still exist and are in need of preservation.

The church’s beginnings extend back to 1803, when Bishop Francis Asbury appointed Levin Edney to the Nashville Circuit near Pasquo and the infant Belleview area (the spelling was changed to Bellevue in 1969). Levin Edney’s brother, Newton, deeded land to his brother and the tiny congregation to build “Edney’s Meeting House,” (currently the site of Pasquo Church of Christ). In 1813, the building burned down and was replaced the same year at a nearby location as Edney’s Chapel, where the congregation remained for 97 years. The congregation relocated to 7544 Old Harding Road in 1910 as the Bellevue Methodist Episcopal Church, and again in 1969 to 7501 Old Harding Road where it remains today. Beginning with Levin Edney the church has been led by 123 pastors, including the Rev. David Rainey, who serves there today.

The Archive and History Committee was appointed by Bellevue UMC in 2005 to find and save precious church documents scattered in homes as well as the Church attic. The Committee’s goals were:

- To be an advocate for the archives and history of the church.
- To locate and identify the records in various formats (see below).
- To protect and preserve the records.
- To make the records easily accessible for reference and research.
- To enable the practice of records management for the future.

The church’s records include meeting minutes, membership records, directories, newsletters, church bulletins, photographs, audio and video tapes, scrapbooks, newspaper clippings, and architectural plans. Since the “ribbon cutting” the archives has been enthusiastically received, supported and used. We have moved slowly but thoroughly, involving many volunteers. A strong feeling exists that the records of the past and present are truly being cared for and made available as the congregation continues to prepare for its 2009 bicentennial celebration. A summary of the archives collections is now on the church’s web site at www.bumc.com, along with a timeline of its history.

A Short History of the DuBose Conference Center

Visitors, looking across the tree shaded grounds of DuBose Conference Center on top of Monteagle Mountain, might well imagine they could hear wafting on the soft breezes the voices of the young ladies from across the Southland who came to attend Fairmount College. It was a totally different world in 1872 when Mrs. Louise Yerger and Mrs. Harriet Kells moved their girls’ school from Jackson, Mississippi, to the mountain. Both women, widows who had survived the War Between the State, were determined to pass along to the younger generation the cultural and social values they deemed so important.

Mrs. Kells is quoted as saying the “within doors was the digging for Latin and French and mathematical roots; outside, the grubbing hoe and axe wrought their more evident transformations.” In time, the yard included a flower garden and orchard, tennis courts, a ball ground and a well-kept lawn which, in early spring, was studded with wood violets. An old water pump and several large trees remain from those early years.

The site of Moffat’s Station, as Monteagle was first named, was chosen by two women as a compromise between two competing areas: a co-educational school at Sewanee, home of the University of the South, as urged by the Bishop of Mississippi, or 500 acres of land at Tracy City, offered by the Tennessee Coal and Railroad Company.

The women’s decision was made possible by the offer of 50 acres of land by Col. John Moffat, a Scotch-Canadian temperance lecturer who owned the entire top of the mountain, from bluff to bluff in one direction and from the boundary of the University of the South to the mountain top on the east where the school was located. In addition to the land, Moffat also built the first building, with the cost interest free for the first five years and a total of 20 years to pay it off. The help and interest of the University of the south and the Tennessee Coal and Railroad Company continued. The railroad line ran close to the school, with connections to many points in the country and often provided special service for the school.

Sewanee provided for the spiritual needs of the school by supplying a chaplain, Dr. William Porcher DuBose, who also taught theology at the University. Formerly of Charleston, S. C., DuBose was the first Chaplain at Sewanee following the war. Several years later, Dr. DuBose and Mrs. Yerger were married, as he had found in her “a women of intellectual acquirements and a real thinker.” By this time, the University of the south had found it necessary to provide home discipline and cultural environment for their students, so the DuBoses moved back to Sewanee and into the recently completed St. Like’s Hall.

A few years later, Mrs. Kells returned to Jackson for a visit and remained to establish, with the help of Frances Willard, the first Women’s Christian Temperance Union in Mississippi.

At Fairmount, meanwhile, Silas McBee, later to gain fame as author and architect, was installed as principal. He turned the school into a church institution that might be “for girls what Sewanee was for young men.” In line with this idea, there were courses of lectures by Sewanee professors given to the students at Fairmount.

McBee also instituted very strict regulations, including “no dresses of silk, satin or velvet” nor “expensive articles of jewelry.” The students could write no more than two letters a week, one of which must be to the family, and absolutely no letters or visits from “young gentlemen.”

Some years later, after a brief leadership by others, Dr. DuBose’s children assumed leadership of the school. His son, William, was business manager; daughter Susan was principal and may a teacher. Among the students during this period were the Soong sisters from China, one of whom later became Madame Chiang Kai-Shek. The school, born in the wake of one war, closed its doors with the advent of World War I.

Following the war, the property was acquired for the DuBose Memorial Church Training School. The organization, which included several prominent Chattanooga Episcopal laymen, came into being through the interest of Dr. William Sterling Claiborne in providing a place to train mature men with professional and business experience for the rural ministry.

The school was operated on a self-help basis, with the students working on the farm and maintaining the buildings, as well as attending class and studying. The frame buildings burned to the ground during the winter of 1924, but rebuilding soon began, paid for through an aggressive building fund program, which included fund-raising social events in New York City, sponsored by celebrities (see DuBose Center on page 9)

Tennessee Archivist, Summer-Fall 2008
Greetings to all the Tennessee Archivists, and other STA members outside of Tennessee! I hope your summer went well! This is just a quick note to let you know your officers of STA have been hard at work, planning great things, including the Annual Meeting, to be held November 5-7 at the DuBose Conference Center (www.duboseconf.org) in Monteagle. Many thanks to the members of the various committees who have worked hard to ensure that the meeting will be a successful one. Please see elsewhere in this newsletter for information about our meeting, including a schedule of sessions.

Tennessee is a one of a handful of states that cover a wide geographical region, making state-wide conferences and meetings a challenge to plan, execute and even attend. People in Bristol are 500 miles from Memphis (according to Yahoo maps). There are regions in the US where you could travel across five or six states and still not cover 500 miles. This unfortunate fact no-doubt reduces the number of attendees to our meetings since a meeting in the east requires a long journey for members in the west, and vice-versa. And, with fuel prices as they are, and with the always limited travel allowances that repositories and institutions offer, this weighs heavily on the decision to attend a meeting or not.

For these reasons, we hope to make our annual meetings worth the effort and expense to attend. We try to keep registration costs down and we try to find economical and suitable housing. Our sessions reflect what you have told us you want via our surveys. And, we are offering the Pre-Conference session, on oral history programs, for free! If you do attend the meeting in November, I don’t think you’ll be disappointed. I wish everyone a great fall and let me know if you have any questions. I look forward to seeing everyone at Monteagle in early November! Steve, Steve Cox, STA Vice-president such as Franklin D. Roosevelt, then a New York lawyer, and Judge William McAdoo. The buildings were erected and the school back in business a year after it burned. The school flourished after that, with many church leaders trained there, including several bishops. The Rt. Rev. Reuss-Froylan, Bishop of Puerto Rico, was a graduate of the DuBose School.

With the coming of world War II, the school was closed. The number of students had declined due to the war, and other seminaries were now accepting married men., So that the original purpose of the school no longer existed.

The buildings and grounds remained in the hands of the DuBose School board, but were leased to the Tennessee Diocese of the Episcopal Church for a camp and conference center. Finally, in 1956, the trustees of the school offered the property to the Diocese, which bought it and began capital improvements.

Today, it is open year round for camps, conferences, meetings and recreational events, offering a spiritual and educational center for the now three Dioceses of Tennessee. It also is open to other religious and secular groups.

The outside of the three-story building shows a strong Moroccan influence in color and construction. On either side of the lobby and on the two upper floors are the old dormitory rooms, now used top house those coming to meetings as the center. There is a single bathroom for each wing on each floor. In addition to this, there is another building, built by Holiday Inn, with typical motel-type rooms, with individual baths. There are two chapels. The older one is situated at the end of Claiborne Hall. The larger chapel, in the newer section, can accommodate about 200.

For the recreation-minded, there is a covered outdoors building suitable for crafts or assembly programs or for picnics. There is also a sparkling swimming pool on the grounds, and numerous hiking opportunities nearby for the adventurous outdoor groups experience.

(The above excerpt was taken from an article in the Chattanooga Times, Saturday, August 14, 1982.)
